Cellutrak's GPS Tracking System Recovers Stolen Lamborghini Huracan from a Scarborough, Ontario Home Invasion.

Lamborghini Huracan 2015 valued at $200,000.

March 2024 — A Scarborough, Ontario resident was targeted for their high end Lamborghini Huracan. In the early AM, car thieves broke into their house in order to obtain their car keys. They quickly got the Lamborghini out and drove off. Luckily for this resident, the company that leased the Lamborghini relies on Cellutrak's Anti-Theft system to facilitate vehicle recoveries. This vehicle was stolen and taken on the 407 highway until it reached it's final destination in Etobicoke. It was left in the parking lot of a building.

Part of the Cellutrak theft prevention solution is the capability to remotely disable the starter for a easy recovery process. The customer killed the starter of the Lamborghini to allow the Toronto Police enough time to recuperate the vehicle. Police were able to tow the vehicle to their impound for further investigation. A system like Cellutrak's provides information in real time and facilitates a quick response from police. This whole process from theft to impound took 3 hours.

According to the Toronto Police residential break-and-enters to steal car keys jumped 400% in 2023. Police are now advising residents to leave their keys in their front hall to allow for easy access. They are concerned with an escalation of violence as criminals are younger and taking bigger risks. Car owners in Canada can no longer rely on built in manufactured technology or insurance company's out-dated recommendations. Cellutrak has innovative technology that works in real time to prevent and recover.
